

Larry White is co-owner of Invigoils (a oilseed crushing facility). He has traveled the world extensively promoting and selling American products. Prior to starting his own business he was the International Agribusiness Manager at the North Dakota Trade Office. He also served prior to that as the Marketing Director for the Northern Pulse Growers organization. He also marketed value-added food and feed for Paulson Premium Seed of Bowman, ND. Larry has over 20 years of marketing value-added agriculture around the globe. At the North Dakota Trade office he was instrumental in establishing the beef develop program and help write their animal health protocol for the country of Kazakhstan. Larry has worked in many developing countries to help improve their livestock and agricultural conditions. He worked in Ethiopia with the USAID Farmer to Farmer program to help local farmers with value-added agriculture. His strategies include developing market research, international trade missions and producer to buyer education initiatives. Larry's background in North Dakota agriculture includes raising purebred cattle and producing over 15 different crops. Larry is a graduate of North Dakota State University, College of Agriculture.